

Amanda R. Root

Associate

Amanda's civil litigation practice focuses on the defense of general liability claims, including construction and employment.

Amanda obtained a B.S. in Integrated Science and Technology from James Madison University where she focused on environmental science and biotechnology. After ten years of working in Washington D.C. law firms, ultimately as an intellectual property paralegal, she attended Delaware Law School. During her law school career, she served as Research Editor for the Widener Law Review and as a judicial extern for the Honorable Mary Pat Thyng (ret.) in the United States District Court for the District of Delaware.
