

Alexander W. Hatch

Associate

Alexander's civil litigation practice focuses on the defense of general liability claims.

Alexander obtained a B.A. from the University of Arkansas. After working in various industries including sales and health, he attended Faulkner University for his law degree. During law school, he gained experience in mediation and was a member of the Black Law Students Association and Phi Alpha Delta. After law school, he worked in immigration law and public defense, attending numerous hearings and motions, managing administrative tasks, handling a significant caseload, and gaining trial experience.

Alexander currently serves as an adjunct professor of business law at Columbia College. In his spare time, he can be found at racetracks or soccer fields and watching college football or European football.
